Market Perspective: Fed Looks to End Quantitative Easing

The markets continue to perform well, highlighted by the S&P 500 Index, which climbed 1.92 percent in the month ending July 15. It was choppy for some momentum-driven sectors as well as for small-cap stocks. The Russell 2000 dipped 0.8 percent over the period, which left it down slightly for the year, in stark contrast to the more than 6 percent gain for the S&P 500 Index. The existence of such a disparity in performance between the two indices highlights that, while stocks are doing well overall, the extreme optimism that was present a few months ago has dissipated. This isn't surprising. Given the substantial rally in 2013, we expected that the market would be more subdued in 2014.

One of the most important stories in June came from the Federal Reserve, which set an October end-date for quantitative easing. Assuming the economy remains on its present trajectory, this extraordinary policy, which was first implemented all the way back in 2008, may finally end. The Federal Reserve also indicated that most members expect monetary policy will begin to tighten in 2015, with rates increasing by 0.50 to 0.75 percent. These expectations certainly have implications for the bond market, but investors seem to be focused on stocks in the immediate aftermath of Janet Yellen's testimony on July 15.

The Fed made waves and generated headlines in its report to Congress on July 15, submitted as part of chairman Yellen's testimony. The report said, "Equity valuations of smaller firms, as well as social media and biotechnology firms, appear to be stretched, with ratios of prices to forward earnings remaining high relative to historical norms." The comments focus on sectors of the market that had already performed poorly in 2014 and led to further selling immediately following the dissemination of the comments.

The Fed doesn't see the market as overvalued, though. The Fed wrote, "Valuation measures for the overall market in early July were generally at levels not far above their historical averages, suggesting that, in aggregate, investors are not excessively optimistic regarding equities." The Fed report dinged small caps and the aforementioned sectors, but the effect will be limited. In the 1990s, Alan Greenspan made his famous comments about "irrational exuberance" years before the bull market ended and well before the truly irrational behavior actually began. In the long run, the market responds to Fed policy, not comments. As for the economy, the very important manufacturing sector remained strong in June, even though the manufacturing PMI edged down slightly to 55.3. This is still well in expansion territory, with any number above 50 being positive. Retail sales weren't strong, but it is a lagging indicator for the economy and it may be a result of the poor first-quarter GDP number. Auto sales were strong, suggesting that the consumer remains on solid footing.

Earnings season began with strong reports from the financial sector. Wells Fargo (WFC) and J.P. Morgan (JPM) turned in solid numbers, while Goldman Sachs (GS) beat its earnings forecast by a substantial margin. Shares of Intel (INTC) rallied nearly 10 percent after the firm beat expectations. Shares had previously rallied strongly in June, when the firm raised expectations for earnings and it went on to beat those higher estimates. The bounce will keep semiconductors among the best-performing sectors in 2014.

Johnson & Johnson (JNJ) also reported earnings and revenue that beat estimates. Pharmaceuticals have been strong in 2014, and drug sales made a large contribution to JNJ's strong performance. Abbot Labs (ABT) and St. Jude Medical (STJ) also reported positive results. Healthcare remains one of the better-performing sectors this year, and the earnings season indicates it has the fundamental support to continue outperforming in the second half.

One sector to keep an eye on in the second half is energy, which was one of the better-performing sectors in the first half of the year, second only to utilities. Earnings releases haven't yet started for the industry, but oil prices slipped to nearly $100 per barrel in the first half of July. The lower price for oil didn't dent share prices, however, as share prices had already come off their highs.

Demand for energy increases as the economy grows. More demand for energy should mean energy companies achieve better financial results. Higher profits, or the expectation of higher profits, should mean higher stock prices. Of course, the sector is affected by forces other than GDP growth, with changes in energy supply being another source of performance and price volatility. Currently, the political unrest in various countries in the Middle East and Ukraine, as well as the coming hurricane season in the Gulf of Mexico, is expected to keep pressure on supply and therefore energy prices. This combination of GDP growth and stable or increasing energy prices could lead to a further rally in energy prices in the second half, further extending the sector's outperformance.

Utilities remain off their highs. The sector often performs well when interest rates fall, which occurred in the first half of the year. As expected, the stock prices of utilities increased and the sector was the best-performing for the six-month period. The market's general expectation has been that interest rates will move higher as the Fed winds up quantitative easing, thereby causing utilities to perform poorly. However, rates have not increased so far in 2014 despite expectations that QE will wind down. Whether rates move upward when the Fed fully implements its policy change in the second half is a big question. We believe rates will, indeed, increase and have positioned the model portfolios accordingly.

As we head into late summer, markets remain quiet. Light summer trading can result in greater volatility, but this year that hasn't been the case. The next month should be relatively calm thanks to solid earnings reports and economic data.

Finally, our latest special report, The Best ETF for 2014, has been released and is available on our website, www.mutualfund-investorguide.com. We have chosen Vanguard Dividend Appreciation (VIG) because it provides exposure to high-quality companies while taking on less risk compared to the S&P 500. It also has very low fees, making the fund a worthy core holding for your investment portfolio. If you have any questions, please call us at (888) 252-5372.

Portfolio Updates

We made one change to the portfolios this month. Effective July 15 we sold SPDR DJIA (DIA) and purchased Vanguard Dividend Appreciation (VIG) in the ETF Straight Growth Portfolio.

The S&P 500 Index gained 1.92 percent over the past month and is now up 6.75 percent for the year through July 15. The Nasdaq gained 2.45 percent and the Dow Jones Industrial Average gained 1.70 percent over the past month. The Russell 2000 retreated 0.76 percent and again moved into negative territory for 2014.

The ETF Aggressive Sector Portfolio advanced 1.34 percent over the past month and is up 5.88 percent in 2014. SPDR S&P Biotech (XBI) fell 4.04 percent, following gains of nearly 18 percent over the previous month. Approximately half the loss came on July 15, when the Federal Reserve singled out biotechnology, among other sectors, saying it had "stretched valuations." The best-performing holding was Technology Select Sector SPDR (XLK), which gained 3.09 percent. iShares Dow Jones U.S. Financials (IYF) rallied 2.09 percent on the month, helped by solid earnings reports from major banks. iShares Dow Jones U.S. Industrials (IYJ) slipped 0.05 percent on the month. The largest holding, with over 10 percent of assets, is General Electric (GE), which reported a 13 percent increase in profits during the second quarter.

The ETF Straight Growth Portfolio gained 1.71 percent over the past month, improving its year-to-date return to 7.28 percent. iShares U.S. Pharmaceuticals (IHE) rallied 1.96 percent; this healthcare subsector continues its strong 2014 performance and, based on earnings results thus far, still has room to move higher. The best-performing holding was SPDR DJIA (DIA), helped in part by two dividends that were paid and a general trend of investors again favoring blue chips over small caps. Although it was a tough month for small caps, mid-cap stocks did well. Rydex S&P MidCap 400 Pure Growth (RFG) gained 1.05 percent, moving back into positive territory for the year.

The ETF Balanced Growth Portfolio added 1.52 percent last month and is now up 6.89 percent in 2014. Guggenheim S&P 500 Pure Growth (RPG) was the best-performing holding once again, gaining 2.66 percent on the month. For the year, RPG is up 11 percent. ProShares High Yield-Interest Rate Hedged (HYHG) slipped 0.12 percent as high-yield bonds retreated in July, though the hedge paid off, as it outperformed many high-yield bond funds.

The ETF Conservative Income Portfolio advanced 0.90 percent for the month; overall, the portfolio is up 4.94 percent this year. SPDR Barclays Convertible Securities (CWB) climbed 1.72 percent, and iShares Core High Dividend Equity (HDV) rallied 1.76 percent. HDV has three pharmaceutical giants among its top 10 holdings, as well as Intel (INTC). The best portfolio holding was iShares S&P 500 Index (IVV), which advanced 2.56 percent. iShares High Yield Bond (HYG) struggled, perhaps affected by the negative news surrounding Puerto Rico's high-yield bonds that weighed heavily on municipal funds.

The ETF Global Portfolio gained 0.21 percent over the past month and is now up 6.87 percent for the year. PowerShares International Dividend Achievers (PID) was the best performer for the second consecutive month, improving 1.20 percent. iShares S&P Global 100 (IOO) was the second-best position, up 0.55 percent. Europe was dragged lower by bad news from an Austrian bank and a Portuguese bank. WisdomTree International Dividend ex-Financials (DOO) slipped 0.60 percent, but the lack of exposure to financial holdings limited the losses.

The ETF Aggressive Value Portfolio slipped 0.34 percent in the past month, reducing its year-to-date return to 8.22 percent. Three holdings experienced pullbacks in July. iShares Core Small Cap (IJR) fell 0.31 percent in the past month, but all the losses came on July 15, courtesy of the Federal Reserve's comments. A rebound over the coming month is very likely. Vanguard European Stock (VGK) fell 1.84 percent on the month for the reasons outlined above. PowerShares DB Energy (DBE) had the largest loss, slipping 4.13 percent as natural gas and oil prices slumped.

The ETF Absolute Return/Down Market Portfolio gained 0.54 percent on the month and is down 1.04 percent this year. While the portfolio is in negative territory on the year, we are pleased by its performance compared to the S&P 500, as it is designed to outperform during a declining market. Consumer Staples Select SPDR (XLP) gained 1.46 percent and was the portfolio leader. Although gold was hit by heavy selling in the days leading up to July 15, it still finished the month up 1.29 percent. Gold is still almost 7 percent below its 2014 peak reached in March, though it is well off the lows set at the end of 2013. PowerShares DB U.S. Dollar Bullish Fund (UUP) fell 0.46 percent, but the recent banking troubles in Europe could begin a period of under-performance by the euro, which makes up over 50 percent of the U.S. Dollar Index UUP tracks. Utilities Select SPDR (XLU) gained 0.87 percent.

ETF Options for Income Investors

The Federal Reserve is expected to eliminate its quantitative easing policies in October, contingent upon the continued positive performance of the economy. The effect of the elimination of quantitative easing on interest rates is uncertain, but investors should be paying close attention to their income positions over the coming months. It's possible that little happens over the short term, but warnings from both the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) and Federal Reserve Chairman Yellen indicate that influential economic observers see some risks. The BIS thinks rates should rise, while Yellen concludes that some investors in corporate bonds do not appreciate the potential dangers of rising rates.

ETF investors have a wide range of options for fixed income investing, which provides flexibility when anticipating changes in interest rates. With an understanding of the basics of bond investing, investors can make the best decision given the hundreds of choices available.

Typical bonds are fairly simple to understand. We know with certainty the absolute amount that a bond will pay at maturity. Therefore, the primary determinant of the nominal return on an investment in a bond is the price at which the bond was initially purchased. Price also determines interest rates. Most bonds make fixed income payments, so when bond prices rise, the yield on the bond falls. When the bond price falls, yields rise, meaning prices move inversely to interest rates.

A bond's valuation is simply the present value of its future cash flows, which consist of the coupon payments and the payment at maturity. A discount rate, which takes into account the time value of money and the uncertainty of future payments, is applied to these cash flows to arrive at a single value that is the sum of what all those payments are worth today. If a bond pays 8 percent interest each year, the first year's interest payment is discounted by 8 percent, the second year's by 8 percent squared, and so on. Cash to be paid in the future is worth less today than cash paid today. Using this method, if you invest $1,000 at 8 percent for 10 years, it will grow to $2,159. If, instead, you buy a bond that will pay you $1,000 in 10 years with no interest payments (a zero coupon bond), and interest rates are currently 8 percent, the bond will sell for $463. If you buy $1,000 worth of those zero coupon bonds, in 10 years you will have $2,159.

In general, the longer the maturity of a bond, the higher the interest rate. If you see an exception to this rule, pay close attention, because it may mean a recession or a sovereign debt crisis is looming. The longer the maturity, the greater the interest rate risk, because the return of principal is further in the future.

The best measure of interest rate risk is duration, which provides an idea of how much a bond will change given an increase or decrease in interest rates. Duration is similar to maturity, but it also takes into account cash flows. The higher the cash flow from a bond (the sooner cash is paid), the lower the impact of changes in interest rates. A bond that has a high coupon payment has a shorter duration than a bond of the same maturity with a lower coupon payment. For example, a five-year junk bond will generally have a shorter duration, and thus less interest rate risk, than a five-year Treasury.

Another important factor in bond valuation is credit risk. The riskier a bond, the more interest investors will demand. A five-year junk bond has much higher credit risk than a five-year Treasury bond. Investors in Treasuries don't worry about being repaid, since the United States government has never defaulted on its debt and never should, even in the worst-case scenario, due to its control of the money supply. Conversely, investors in a company with high debt and weak profits are naturally more cautious due to the higher likelihood of default.

Three other terms to be familiar with are coupon, yield, and yield to maturity (YTM). The coupon on a bond is its interest payment. Let's take the example of a bond with a face value of $1,000. If the coupon is 5 percent, the bond pays $50 each year. The yield is similar to dividend yield, as it is the coupon divided by the current price of the bond. YTM also factors in the profit or loss from buying a bond at a discount or a premium to its face value. Since the bond will repay $1,000 at maturity, if you buy it at a discount, you can earn a profit, while if you purchase it at a premium, you will lose money at maturity. YTM is the total return you'll receive if you buy the bond today and hold to maturity.

Finally, when evaluating a bond fund, look for the 30-day SEC yield. This is the most accurate current snapshot of the bond's yield because it takes into account the dividends and interest earned during the 30-day period after deducting the fund's expenses. As such, it is a more accurate reflection of the actual net cash paid to the bondholder. In fact, in this newsletter, we pay the most attention to this yield measure.

These data points are available for every bond ETF on fund providers' websites, on sites such as Morningstar, and in our newsletter. Below, we'll look at how investors can evaluate some high-yield bond funds using duration and yield as the main considerations.

Short-term high-yield bond funds provide some protection from changes in interest rates. We recommend investigating two funds in this category: SPDR Barclays Short Term High Yield Bond (SJNK) and PIMCO 0-5 Year High Yield Corporate Bond (HYS). SJNK has a 30-day SEC yield of 3.92 percent and a duration of 2.25 years, and HYS has a 30-day SEC yield of 2.93 percent and a duration of 1.90 years. Investors get a respectable yield from both funds, and the impact of a change in interest rates would be relatively low.

For investors looking for higher yield and willing to take on additional risk, junk bonds are still among the best choices as long as credit risk remains subdued. SPDR Barclays High Yield Bond (JNK) yields 4.68 percent and has a duration of 4.21 years. iShares iBoxx $ High Yield Corporate Bond (HYG) has a 30-day SEC yield of 4.22 percent and a duration of 3.95 years. By comparison, the PIMCO 3-7 Year U.S. Treasury (FIVZ) has a duration of 4.52 years but yields only 1.42 percent.

Investors who are worried about higher interest rates should look at funds that offer hedged protection, such as ProShares High Yield-Interest Rate Hedged (HYHG) and Market Vectors Treasury-Hedged High Yield Bond (THHY). These funds offset their holdings in high-yield bonds with short positions on U.S. Treasuries. These funds incur higher expenses due to the need to buy derivatives to take the short positions on Treasuries necessary to hedge, so they pass on some of these costs to investors through a higher expense ratio. In this type of fund, investors forgo the chance to profit from falling interest rates, but they are protected from higher interest rates as long as Treasuries fall in price in proportion to any decrease in the prices of high-yield bonds.

If interest rates rise during a strong economic recovery, credit risk should remain low, but bond prices will decline. As long as the yield gap between high-yield bonds and Treasuries stays roughly the same (which means credit risk remains constant), bonds of similar maturities should fall in tandem. Investors will lose money as the price of the high-yield bonds falls but earn it back from the short position on Treasuries. In comparison, investors in a non-hedged junk bond fund would see the fund's price decline. The worst time to hold a hedged high-yield bond fund would be in a recession where junk bonds tumble and Treasuries rally. In that case, the junk bond holdings in a fund like HYHG lose value and, instead of being protected with the short position on Treasuries, lose even more as Treasury bonds rise in price. A recession doesn't appear likely in the near term. In fact, if anything, investors and the Fed are uneasy about the effects of a stronger economy on the bond markets.

HYHG has a duration of negative 0.29 year versus a duration of 3.95 years for iShares iBoxx $ High Yield Corporate Bond (HYG). If a bond fund has a negative duration, it has short positions. This means if interest rates on the relevant U.S. Treasuries increase 1 percent and junk bonds also see the same increase in rates, HYG would stand to lose about 4 percent in value, while HYHG would gain 0.3 percent. For investors interested in these types of hedged ETFs, we provided additional information in the April edition of the ETF Investor Guide.

Another fund that offers a higher yield is Market Vectors High Yield Municipal Index (HYD). This fund has a 30-day SEC yield of 5.11 percent, higher than the 4.22 percent yield offered by HYG. Compared to HYG's duration of 3.95 years, HYD has a much longer duration of 10.5 years. As a result, investors are taking on significantly more interest rate risk for only a slightly higher yield. Furthermore, credit risk is becoming an issue in this category. This summer, Puerto Rico's fiscal struggles have highlighted the danger of the potential for municipalities to default on their bonds, just like troubles in Detroit did last summer.

The relatively small gap in yields and the large gap in duration highlight how much additional risk investors must take on in order to obtain only slightly more yield using this strategy, to say nothing of the credit risk. Investors who bought HYD at the end of June in search of 1 percent more in yield would have seen that income advantage eliminated by the price decline in the first week of July.

Due to the large number of bond funds in existence, there are numerous funds that target similar segments of the market yet have variation in the index construction. Yield, duration, maturity, and expenses can vary, and investors should consider all aspects of a fund before deciding which fund is the best choice for their portfolio. Also, as always, don't forget to consider each fund's fees when making an investment decision. Higher fees have an impact on returns, and some of the funds discussed, particularly the hedged funds, do have increased expense ratios.
